

Royal Sailing Yacht Bloodhound Begins Sea Trials as Restoration Plans Progress

The Royal Yacht Bloodhound, one of Britain's most historically significant ocean sailing yachts, has returned to the water and is now undergoing sea trials captained by Mark Stapley and under the stewardship of The Royal Yacht Britannia Trust.

Built in 1936 by the prestigious Camper & Nicholsons yard in Gosport, Bloodhound quickly established herself as one of the most successful ocean racing yachts of her time.

From 1962 to 1969, Bloodhound was proudly owned by Queen Elizabeth II and Prince Philip. Renowned for his passion for sailing, Prince Philip acquired the yacht to enjoy racing and family sailing during holidays in Scotland's Western Isles. It was aboard Bloodhound that Prince Charles and Princess Anne learned to sail, and when not in Royal use, she was made available to yacht clubs across the country, helping thousands of young people experience sailing for the first time.

Gifted in 2010 to The Royal Yacht Britannia Trust from the Royal Collection, Bloodhound is regularly berthed alongside The Royal Yacht Britannia in Leith, Edinburgh.

As part of the restoration, 2025 will see Bloodhound take part in a series of sea trials, which began with an initial voyage south from Leith on Friday 4 April. The journey was interrupted on Sunday 6 April by Bloodhound taking on water, and as a precautionary measure to prevent damage and prioritise preservation, the crew who operate a 'no risk' policy, called upon the highly professional team at Caister Lifeboat for assistance.

Franck Bruyère, Chief Executive of The Royal Yacht Britannia, said: "We are delighted with the professional and swift support received from the local lifeboat team. Thanks to their efforts and the dedication of our crew, we are pleased to confirm that Bloodhound is sound once again. The safety and wellbeing of our crew remain our top priority, and we are proceeding with caution and care."

Mr Bruyère continued: "The Royal Yacht Britannia Trust is committed to restoring and preserving Bloodhound so that she can continue to inspire future generations and honour her remarkable heritage by continuing to inclusively educate the next generation."

The Trust will continue to oversee restoration works while preparing Bloodhound for a new chapter in her storied history, ensuring the legacy of this exceptional Royal yacht endures.
